PERSONAMAP©

Personalised Personality Profile

One temperament, two ways of expressing it

Prepared for	Thilakshana R
Profile code	X N F J
Temperament	Idealist (NF) — to be confirmed with you
Your two readings	ENFJ — Connection Builder / INFJ — Visionweaver
Report date	25 September 2026

How to read this report

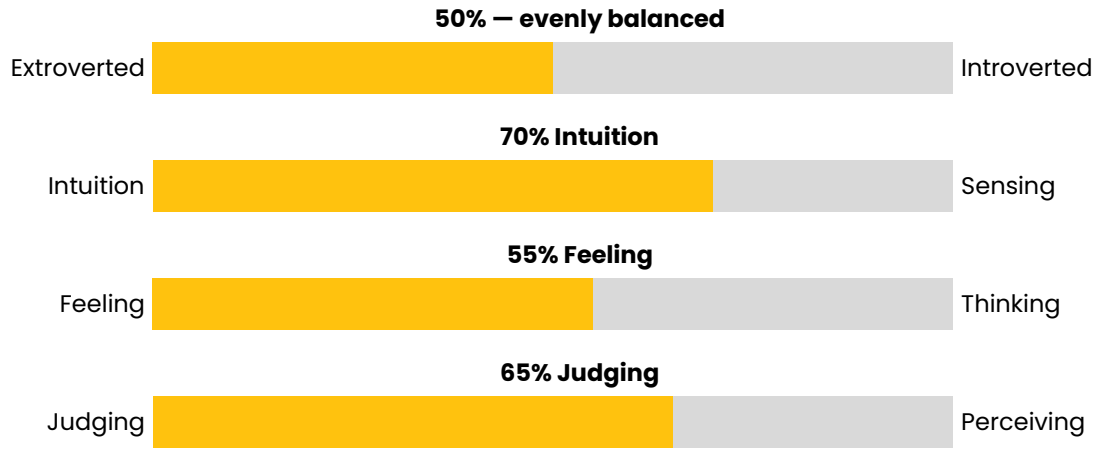

One dimension — where you draw your energy — came out exactly balanced, so two versions of your type apply rather than one. They share the same foundation and differ in how outwardly you work. Where that matters, both are shown.

This report describes preferences and behavioural tendencies. It does not measure ability, intelligence, competence or mental health. You are the final judge of whether it fits.

CONFIDENTIAL — PERSONAL. Prepared for the named participant only. Not to be used for selection, promotion, performance rating or any decision affecting employment. © Sandbox Consultancy Services (Pvt) Ltd, 2026. PersonaMap© is a proprietary work of Sandbox Consultancy Services (Pvt) Ltd. The temperament model draws on the work of David Keirsey (Please Understand Me, 1978; Please Understand Me II, 1998) and on Jung's theory of psychological types; the leadership styles referenced are those described by Daniel Goleman.

Personality profile summary

Your four preference results, and what each one means in practice.

- Extroverted / Introverted (50% / 50%) — exactly balanced, with no clear pattern underneath. This is a genuine result, and it is the one part of your profile we cannot describe for you.
- Intuition (70%) — attends to meaning, pattern and implication rather than concrete detail, and communicates through image and analogy rather than literally.
- Feeling (55%) — close to even. Your manner is consistently warm, yet you are willing to raise a difficult point rather than smooth it over. The two pull the result toward the middle.
- Judging (65%) — plans and schedules thoroughly, while being noticeably slower to settle the decision itself.

> Overall profile: XNFJ — Idealist
>
> A thoughtful, warm and well-organised person who works from meaning and reads people closely. You plan carefully and communicate through ideas rather than detail.
>
> Because your energy dimension falls exactly on the line, two readings apply: the Connection Builder and the Visionweaver. Both are Idealists.

CONFIDENTIAL — PERSONAL. Prepared for the named participant only. Not to be used for selection, promotion, performance rating or any decision affecting employment. © Sandbox Consultancy Services (Pvt) Ltd, 2026. PersonaMap© is a proprietary work of Sandbox Consultancy Services (Pvt) Ltd. The temperament model draws on the work of David Keirsey (Please Understand Me, 1978; Please Understand Me II, 1998) and on Jung's theory of psychological types; the leadership styles referenced are those described by Daniel Goleman.

Your profile

Your responses place you among the Idealists, who work from meaning and from an interest in how people see things. Read that as a question rather than a conclusion: the two dimensions that set temperament came out at moderate and at near-even, so the label is the least certain thing in this report. The evidence below sits at the level of specific behaviour and stands on its own.

Dimension	Your side	Strength	What this looks like in practice
E — I	Both	Balanced	Genuinely even, and unusually so — see below.
S — N	iNtuition	Moderate	You attend to meaning and implication, and explain through image and analogy rather than literal detail. You still check what experience has shown.
T — F	Feeling	Slight	Near-even, for a specific reason. Your manner is consistently warm, but you prefer to argue a point through rather than keep the peace.
J — P	Judging	Moderate	Your clearest preference. You plan and schedule thoroughly, and are slower to close the decision itself.

> About your balanced energy result
>
> A balanced result on this dimension often has a clear shape underneath it — outgoing in one respect, reserved in another. Yours does not. Across every aspect of it — who opens a conversation, how freely you speak, how wide a circle you keep, whether people leave you charged or depleted — your answers were mild or evenly divided.
>
> We are not going to invent a pattern that is not there. This is genuinely open, and it is worth your own attention: notice over the next few weeks which settings leave you able to do good work the following morning.

Your two readings

Both are Idealists. Both work from meaning, read people closely and care about authenticity. They differ in how outwardly that happens.

	ENFJ — Connection Builder	INFJ — Visionweaver
Works by	Engaging people directly and drawing them in	Developing the idea first, then bringing it to people
Energy goes to	Conversation, connection, bringing a group along	Depth, reflection, working the thought through
Influence comes from	Warmth and presence in the room	Insight and the quality of what you have seen
Develops others by	Encouraging and involving them as you go	Noticing what they need before they say it

CONFIDENTIAL — PERSONAL. Prepared for the named participant only. Not to be used for selection, promotion, performance rating or any decision affecting employment. © Sandbox Consultancy Services (Pvt) Ltd, 2026. PersonaMap© is a proprietary work of Sandbox Consultancy Services (Pvt) Ltd. The temperament model draws on the work of David Keirsey (Please Understand Me, 1978; Please Understand Me II, 1998) and on Jung's theory of psychological types; the leadership styles referenced are those described by Daniel Goleman.

What stands out most about you

- You plan, and the plan holds. Scheduling and advance planning are the strongest, most consistent features of your profile, with nothing pulling against them. Structure is something you supply rather than something you have to force.
- You are warm in manner, without exception. Every aspect of how you deal with people points the same way. Whatever the content of a conversation, people are likely to find you approachable.
- You explain through meaning, and you read how others see things. Your instinct is image and analogy rather than literal detail, and you read people for their viewpoint rather than for what they can contribute.

What sets you apart

- Warm, but not conflict-avoidant. This is the most individual thing in your profile, and it explains why your Feeling result sits so close to the middle. Profiles like yours usually emphasise protecting harmony. Yours does the opposite: you consistently favour reasoning things through over smoothing them over, and treat being too accepting as the worse fault. The combination is a warm style with a willingness to say the difficult thing.
- You plan faster than you decide. Your planning is as consistent as anything in your profile, yet your need to settle a decision is markedly weaker. You are likely to have the approach fully mapped while the choice itself is still open.

Your strengths

What you are likely to do well

- You set work up so it does not slip. Structure is your most reliable contribution and the one colleagues would probably name first.
- You pick up how others are reading a situation. In analytics work this is the difference between a correct answer and one a stakeholder can act on.
- You make abstract material land. Explaining through analogy and meaning is a genuine asset when presenting findings to people who do not work in them.
- You raise things others leave unsaid, without damaging the relationship. That combination is less common than either half alone.

What may take more conscious effort

- Committing. You plan more consistently than you close, and may keep options open past the point where deciding would serve you better.
- Staying with the concrete detail. Your attention runs to pattern and implication, so verifying the underlying figures may need to be a deliberate step.
- Calibrating directness. Because your manner is warm, you may underestimate how firmly a point lands when you make it.

What is likely to drain you

- Plans that change repeatedly after they have been agreed.
- Being pushed to commit before you judge the information is adequate.
- Communication that stays purely literal, with no sense of why the work matters.

CONFIDENTIAL — PERSONAL. Prepared for the named participant only. Not to be used for selection, promotion, performance rating or any decision affecting employment. © Sandbox Consultancy Services (Pvt) Ltd, 2026. PersonaMap© is a proprietary work of Sandbox Consultancy Services (Pvt) Ltd. The temperament model draws on the work of David Keirsey (Please Understand Me, 1978; Please Understand Me II, 1998) and on Jung's theory of psychological types; the leadership styles referenced are those described by Daniel Goleman.

Under pressure

This section describes likely tendencies rather than measured behaviour. Read it as a hypothesis and check it against your own experience.

Likely triggers	Repeated disruption to a plan you have already built and agreed. Being required to make a final call before you judge you have enough to go on — a particular bind, since you plan firmly but close slowly.
Early signs to watch	Re-planning rather than deciding: the schedule gets revised again instead of the choice being made. Going quiet on the decision while continuing to work hard on everything around it.
What may help	Separate what is fixed from what is still open, in writing, and share both. Name one decision you will make by a specific date, and treat that date as you would any other deadline — which, on this evidence, you treat seriously.

How you solve problems

Your profile suggests a diplomatic approach: you work outward from people and meaning rather than from system or procedure.

1. Read the situation	2. Frame the meaning	3. Plan the approach	4. Commit and execute
Fastest step You read people and context quickly.	Fastest step You find the shape of it and can explain it.	Strong Thorough and reliable. Your most consistent evidence.	Most-skipped step Closing. The plan is ready before the decision is.

One adjustment to try: when you start planning, write down the date by which you will decide. You already protect deadlines well; this borrows that strength and applies it to the step where your pattern suggests you lose time.

How you would be likely to lead

This describes preference, not skill, and nothing here is an assessment of your capability. Because you have not yet led a team, read it as how you expect you would lead.

Two approaches sit ahead of the rest, and both are independently supported by the rest of your profile. You would bring people into decisions rather than hand them down — and your instinct for thorough discussion over quick agreement confirms it. Alongside that you would develop people rather than direct them; your habit of reading others for how they see a situation points the same way.

Setting the pace is least natural to you, and this is the most interesting thing in your profile. You hold yourself to an exacting standard — planning and scheduling are the strongest features you have. Yet you do not reach for that standard as a way of leading others. Your discipline appears to be something you apply to yourself rather than a bar you hold other people to.

That restraint is a real strength, and it has one cost. Under genuine time pressure there are signs you would fall back on driving the pace — the very approach you avoid in normal conditions, and the one you have least practice at using well.

One further note: your manner is consistently warm, yet you would be unlikely to lead by protecting harmony. You would deliver difficult things kindly rather than avoid them.

CONFIDENTIAL — PERSONAL. Prepared for the named participant only. Not to be used for selection, promotion, performance rating or any decision affecting employment. © Sandbox Consultancy Services (Pvt) Ltd, 2026. PersonaMap© is a proprietary work of Sandbox Consultancy Services (Pvt) Ltd. The temperament model draws on the work of David Keirsey (Please Understand Me, 1978; Please Understand Me II, 1998) and on Jung's theory of psychological types; the leadership styles referenced are those described by Daniel Goleman.

Working with others

When you follow	You are likely to deliver reliably when you have both the reason and the deadline. Instructions that give you a task without a purpose, or a purpose without a date, are most likely to slow you down.
When you disagree	You appear willing to say the thing rather than let it pass, and to do it without damaging the relationship. Because your Feeling result is near-even, check whether this holds under real pressure or only when the stakes are moderate.
How you build working relationships	Your answers lean toward fewer, closer working relationships, though not strongly. People are likely to trust your judgement before they feel they know you well.

Your development priorities

Priority	Why it matters for you	One action in the next 30 days	A question to sit with
Close decisions on a timetable	You plan more consistently than you decide. In a delivery role, a late decision costs more than an imperfect one.	Pick one open item. Set a decision date now, tell one person, and hold it.	What am I actually waiting for — more information, or more certainty?
Practise setting a visible standard	You hold yourself to a demanding bar but do not use it with others. Under pressure you would reach for it anyway, with little practice at doing it well.	Once, state the standard you expect out loud at the start of a piece of shared work rather than modelling it silently.	Am I protecting people from my standard, or avoiding the conversation?
Test your working pattern for energy	Your energy dimension is genuinely unresolved, and it affects how you should structure your week.	For two weeks, note after each meeting-heavy day and each solo day whether you finished with more or less energy.	Which conditions leave me able to do good work the next morning?

In summary

Three strengths to keep using	Two things to watch	One action this week
• Reliable planning. • Reading how others see a situation. • Explaining abstract material so it lands.	• Decisions drifting behind plans. • Underestimating the weight of your own directness.	• Choose one open decision and put a date on it.

Does this fit?

Both readings are yours and share the same foundation. You may find one describes you better, or that each fits a different setting — either answer is useful. If parts of this do not describe you, that is useful information rather than an error. You are the authority on your own result.

CONFIDENTIAL — PERSONAL. Prepared for the named participant only. Not to be used for selection, promotion, performance rating or any decision affecting employment. © Sandbox Consultancy Services (Pvt) Ltd, 2026. PersonaMap© is a proprietary work of Sandbox Consultancy Services (Pvt) Ltd. The temperament model draws on the work of David Keirsey (Please Understand Me, 1978; Please Understand Me II, 1998) and on Jung's theory of psychological types; the leadership styles referenced are those described by Daniel Goleman.